Grant Mandarino

PhD candidate, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, USA. Specializes in Weimar-era popular prints and illustrated magazines, with a particular focus on those produced within the Communist milieu. His dissertation, Seeing Class: Graphic Satire and the Cultivation of Radicalism in the Weimar Republic, demonstrates how the targeting of working-class audiences during this period spurred formal experimentation and led to re-evaluations of graphic satire's artistic import and political potential. It builds on Mandarino's broader focus on interwar German visual culture and the history of satirical prints and caricature. Additional interests include: critical realist painting, Marxist art historiography, photography, and espionage.
